PRIVATE JEREMIAH HENRY JONES, C.F.M.D.S.

106th Battalion Nova Scotia

Researched and compiled by Indra Teekasingh and Allan Ross

.Jeremiah Jones was born March 30th, 1858, in East Mountain, Nova Scotia. When he enlisted with the 106th Battalion Nova Scotia Rifles on June 19th, 1916, he stated the year of his birth as 1877 so as not to be rejected due to his actual age of 58 years! Transferred to the Royal Canadian Regiment Jones was sent to the Western Front like so many other Canadians and found himself at Vimy Ridge in April 1917. During the battle, Jones and his regiment were pinned down by German Machine Gun fire. He proceeded with an attack on the German Machine Gun nest and destroyed it with a hand grenade. The remaining German Soldiers surrendered to him. Jones returned across the battlefield with his captives carrying the disabled machine gun where he ordered them to deposit the gun at the feet of his commanding officer. He was also wounded by a gun shot to the arm. Jones for his bravery on the battlefield that day was recommended for the Distinguished Conduct Medal - a prestigious decoration for gallantry in the field. For reasons unknown, perhaps due to the racist climate at that time, the Distinguished Conduct Medal was never awarded. It was not until 2010 that the Canadian Government posthumously awarded him the Canadian Forces Medallion for Distinguished Service and The Last Post Fund, erected a new gravestone with full military honours on his behalf.

Jeremiah Jones seen in his First World War uniform. Black Canadians had difficulty enlisting due to the racism of the era. He was one of 16 that enlisted with the 106th Battalion Nova Scotia Rifles.

Occupation - General surgeon and Orthopaedic Surgeon

Details

Born on 20 March 1872, the third child and second son of William George Pearson, civil engineer, and his wife Emma Hind, he was educated at University College School and St Bartholomew's Hospital, where he won the Harvey prize and served as house surgeon and ophthalmic house surgeon. He graduated in science in 1892 and qualified in 1895 with honours in forensic medicine.

After serving as House Surgeon, and also as Ophthalmic House Surgeon at St. Bartholomew's, he obtained the F.R.C.S. (Eng.).

He emigrated to South Africa in 1900, settling in Alicedale Cape Province and served as District Surgeon and Railway Medical Officer. He served in the Alicedale Town Guard as 39 Private M. G. Pearson as there were no Officer positions available and he still wished to serve.

After the war in 1902 he joined W Addison at Durban, where he carried on a large general practice including surgery and ophthalmology for the rest of his career.

In 1903 Joined Natal Medical Corps as Lieutenant, promoted Captain and appointed Adjutant of the Durban Company. During the 1906 Natal Native Rebellion, awarded the Medal and 1906 Bar, after the rebellion in 1907 he was posted to the Reserve of Officers with rank of Major.

In 1914 – 1915 German South West Campaign, in the rank of Major. Appointed Surgeon Specialist to Berange's Column (Eastern Force). He was also awarded an MID. When the campaign was over in South West Africa he took charge of the Surgical Division of the South African Military Hospital Unit which went overseas and stationed at Abbeville France.

While in France he was appalled at the high mortality rate from compound fractures of the femur. With his characteristic thoroughness and determination he set about devising ways and means of dealing with this widespread problem. He worked under the most adverse conditions, and evolved a method of transportation and treatment of fractured femur which made his name well known throughout the Commonwealth. England and America.

His work was acclaimed on all sides and for this he was mentioned in dispatches. He made his mark, with the support of his friends Sir Anthony Bowlby and Sir Robert Jones, by promoting a great improvement in the treatment of compound fractures of the femur, successfully reducing the excessive mortality, and was later given charge of the 1000 bed "femur hospital" at Edmonton, London, England. Pearson's method attracted the admiration of American orthopaedic surgeons, and he published a record of his work.

The magnificent results obtained were a revelation, and compared very favourably with those of modern orthopaedic surgeons. This hospital was a Mecca of surgeons of all the Armed Forces. including Americans. It is of interest that a recent American textbook of surgery gives in detail the methods Dr. Pearson used. After the war Dr. Pearson returned to Durban to resume practice, which rapidly became more than he could manage.

Because of this work he was mentioned in dispatches, created Officer of the Order of the British Empire in the military division, and promoted brevet Lieutenant-Colonel.

He took the late Dr. A. D. Edington into partnership and later his son Lawrence joined him. Dr. Pearson retired in 1936, but in 1940 again joined the partnership (without remuneration), to enable his son to join the S.A.M.C. in World War 2.

Dr. Maurice Pearson took on part-time military duties, and was Lieutenant-Colonel in charge of auxiliary hospitals in the Durban area. He was a past President of the Natal Coastal Branch of the Medical Association of South Africa, and past President of the South African Medical Congress held in Durban.

In September 1937 he was awarded a patent for a special folding stretcher to be used in emergency medical situations where transportation is required that came about after being present and treating the casualties at the Kynoch's Dynamite Factory in Natal. This metal stretcher was cheap, fool-proof, indestructible, folds compactly and is light. It does away with vertical vibration and almost abolishes longitudinal or lateral jerks. Could be used in Vans, Open or Closed Raliway Trucks and in the backs of Motor Vehicle Trucks and not be required to be fixed to the floor. This stretcher was taken up by the South African and various Commonwealth Governments.

He was the most senior officer and a past Colonel of the 1st Field Ambulance, S.A.M.C., in Durban.

Dr. Pearson was Senior Visiting Surgeon at the Addington Hospital from 1927-1936. When Dr. Pearson retired in 1936 he was appointed Consulting Surgeon to Addington Hospital, a post which he occupied until he died. He was a past Chairman of the Natal Cripple Care Association, and a past Chairman of the Natal Radium Trust Fund--a fund which he helped to organize, and for which he raised a considerable amount of money.

Dr. Pearson was noted for his integrity, a wonderful capacity for friendship and kindness, often providing shelter for human derelicts. It is safe to say he had no enemies and was much loved by his patients and professional colleagues.

Dr. Pearson died as he would have wished, suddenly. in his lovely home, which he designed, built and loved so well. He married Miss Agnes Hunter, a nurse at St. Bartholomew's Hospital by whom he had one son. His wife died in 1942. Later he married Miss Dorothy Ballam who survives him.

Colonel Pearson died in May of 1952 at the age of 80.

1. New Free" Canadian Vietnam Veteran Documentary Film "Honor and Remember"

The Canadian Vietnam Veterans Association (Winnipeg, Manitoba Group) worked with White Tower Films in the production of this new documentary. The film is available free through the internet streaming serve of Vimeo by clicking on the link below (or pasting the address in you browser).

<https://vimeo.com/426430910>

Title: "Honor and Remember" (White Tower Films)

Length: 82 minutes\L Produced by Catherine Thomas—Written and directed by Nick Vergados

(Note: Shorter topic clips taken from he film may also show up on Vimeo on the side bar.)

Other topics include "coming home" to Canada, being labeled as mercenaries, recognition, issues with the Royal Canadian Legion, PTSD, health, benefits, and the work of the Canadian Vietnam Veterans Association. There is some interesting Vietnam War film footage interspersed throughout the film along with related chronological events.

Rob and Ron (and Harry Harrison) brought their Canadian Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall from Winnipeg to the Military Museum in Calgary in 2018 while the VN War "Moving Wall" Memorial was here. They are also mention in the eleven page feature on "Canadians in the Vietnam War" in the January/February 2018 edition of Legion Magazine.

2. I have attached a picture of the portable "Canadian Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall" that the group in the film has.

The "Canadian Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall" is a traveling wall to remember Canadians who died in the Vietnam war. The Canadian Vietnam Veterans Association (Winnipeg) takes the wall to various events in Canada and the United States . This picture shows the wall at the Military Museums in Calgary in 2018."

WAR STORY

During the winter campaign in Italy in late 1944, when the First Canadian Division was fighting across the Sangro, the vehicle congestion on the main routes was something terrific, with the result that a convoy might wait for hours to cross the only bridge.

Viewing the possibility of a long delay with some alarm, the officer in charge of a convoy heading north spotted a well-developed set of vehicle tracks branching off from the main route just where he was held up, and decided that where one convoy could go his could follow. On arriving at the bank of the river and noticing the track emerging on the far side, he jumped to the obvious conclusion that the water must be shallow and thereupon drove in, followed quickly by two or three of his 3-tonners. The vehicle's sank completely out of sight.

After being rescued, he learned that the route he had followed was that normally used by a platoon of DUKWs— an amphibious vehicle.
